The Hagerman Group Appoints New Chief Safety Officer

Safely Building a Better Future

INDIANAPOLIS – The Hagerman Group, an Indiana-based construction solutions provider, welcomes Thomas White as its new Chief Safety Officer. Thomas brings 10 years of safety management experience to Hagerman. He earned a Bachelor of Science in Safety Sciences at Indiana University of Pennsylvania and has worked in several states during his career including Pennsylvania, California, Texas and most recently, Colorado.

Thomas joins The Hagerman Group as Chief Safety Officer to focus on training, instilling and reinforcing safe behaviors throughout the company and the entire project team, including owners, architects and subcontractors. Safety is a corporate mindset at Hagerman and we assume it to be a moral obligation of our corporation especially important in an industry innate with danger. We promote and nurture an injury free environment with the goal of achieving zero incidents on our projects. One of Thomas' goals is to build a safety culture throughout the company. This allows him to focus on risk management instead of policing jobsites.

Scott Miller, President of The Hagerman Group stated, “Thomas brings a plethora of experience and certifications as our Chief Safety Officer. Since safety is one of our corporate values, we are fortunate to have a talented individual such as Thomas join the company and enforce our culture as well as continue to strive for no loss-time injuries like we’ve had over the past six years.”
